My interest was piqued when Randy Masters mentioned that he used to have an Orgone Accumulator. Since I had never heard of such a device, nor indeed of Orgone, and since I respect Randy as such a mine of fascinating and well-researched information, I knew instantly that I wanted to learn more about it.

During this Sound Healing and Therapy Certificate Program, I have developed a particular interest in how to best create the optimal environment for healing and spiritual advancement. This had mostly led me to explore the use of pyramids and crystal grids, but the discovery of Orgonite excited me because it adds a new dimension to my endeavour.

However, it would be remiss of me not to mention that in the process of researching Orgone and Orgonite, I have come upon much disagreement and it has not always been easy to pick the wheat from the chaff! As such, I do not claim to have all of the answers, but instead my aim is to present to you an objective overview of what I have discovered so far.

What is Orgone?

Orgone is the name that Wilhelm Reich (1897 - 1957) gave to the omnipresent and primordial life force, which he observed as a blue radiation and believed to be the basis of all life processes, from the formation of galaxies to the cellular or macro-biological level. This wasn't a unique concept as most traditional cultures had long held a common belief in an invisible energy which is everywhere and embodies all things - called Qi by the Chinese, Prana by the Indians, and Mana by the Polynesians, for example. However, Reich's work stands apart from such beliefs in that he discovered Orgone empirically, through experiments, in a scientific way.

Reich was an Austrian medical doctor and scientist. He was a pupil of Sigmund Freud and published many books on psychology before relocating to America and turning his attention to bioelectricity and cosmology. It was in 1939 that Reich discovered that SAPA bions emitted a visible blue fluorescence which killed neighbouring bacteria, made his eyes smart when he looked at it, and could even give him a suntan. Indeed, it had many traits in common with ultraviolet light and it could be argued that it was merely this that Reich was experiencing the effects of, except that this blue light had invigorating properties and caused luminous effects in mid-air where there were no objects to fluoresce off of. Thus, Reich proposed that an etheric bio-energetic life force exists which animates our environment, and he named it Orgone. His laboratory and clinical findings indicated that Orgone could be photographed and measured, and had powerful life-positive biological effects. Essentially, Orgone is the essence of life. Without it, living things die. It's discovery and subsequent research holds the answer to a healthy and blissful life.

Reich believed that the key to physical and mental health was the balance of this Orgone energy which he divided into two categories – 'Positive Orgone Energy' (POR) and anti-biological 'Deadly Orgone Energy' (DOE).

Positive Orgone Energy (POR)

POR is organized, structured and coherent. It is generated from nature and enables living organisms to exist in a healthy state.

Deadly Orgone Energy (DOE)

Conversely, DOE is 'stagnant' and leads to decay and entropy - very similar to the idea of 'blockages' in Traditional Chinese Medicine. Reich believed that DOE was largely responsible for environmental damage and decay on Earth, psychological and mental disturbances in life forms, and the body's physical degeneration.

Reich believed that trauma could imprint itself on a place or a person, and that energy could be blocked by traumatic experiences and stored in the tissues of the body, causing muscular tension. He termed this accumulation and blockage 'armouring' and hypothesized that this stagnant and heavy energy (which prevents the beauty of creativity, love, and positive intention from flowing through) would become DOE and would often be associated with physical and mental disease.

DOE can originate from a bad memory, an act of violence, the EMFs from technology, pollution, or illness.

The Orgone Accumulator

Reich found that Orgone is attracted to and absorbed by every organic material. Non-organic metallic substances also attract Orgone, but they quickly repel it again. Using these properties, Reich developed the Orgone Accumulator to gather Orgone energy in its free form directly from the atmosphere. This is a 6-sided wooden cupboard (about the size of a telephone box) lined with alternating layers of cotton and steel wool, with the inner wall lined with a thin sheet of galvanised steel. The Orgone Accumulator's organic layers attract the atmospheric Orgone energy which is then directed inward by the metal layers. Any energy reflected outward by the metal layers is reabsorbed by the organic material, attracted back to the metal, and directed toward the inside of the box. The result is a higher concentration of Orgone energy inside the box. The more layers, the higher the concentration.

The Orgone Accumulator became a valuable tool in Reich's scientific and medical research. Patients would sit inside the Orgone Accumulator, with impressive results. The high concentration of Orgone was found to boost the immune system, improve the health of the blood, shrink cancerous tumours, speed up healing, and relieve pain. Reich also observed that the Orgone energy in the human bio-system could be measured bio-electrically and was indicative of a person's overall aliveness and vitality; this could often be increased by sitting inside the Orgone Accumulator. Even plants, in complete darkness, would develop chlorophyll and flourish inside an Orgone Accumulator.

More recent research¹ in 2010 has determined that the Orgone Accumulator may have a significant effect on human health and that this could be caused by activation of the parasympathetic nervous system and possibly by an action of the neuro-endocrine system.

It is vitally important to note that Orgone Accumulators merely gather Orgone from the surrounding atmosphere, whether that is POR or DOE. For that reason, Orgone Accumulators should be placed in serene natural environments high in POR, and definitely not near to power grids, electromagnetic fields or nuclear radiation.

In this book, James DeMeo offers Orgone Accumulator construction plans :

The Orgone Blanket

For those patients who were bedridden or too weak to sit inside the Orgone Accumulator, Reich invented the Orgone Blanket. The Orgone Blanket was built according to the same principles as the Orgone Accumulator, with alternating layers of organic material (3 layers of sheep's wool) and inorganic material (2 layers of steel wool). The patient could be completely wrapped or covered, except for the head.

One hour under the Orgone Blanket is enough, and it is not recommended to sleep all night long under the blanket to avoid an overload of energy. However, healthy people can stay under the Orgone Blanket for longer periods of time without side effects.

Moisture significantly lessens the effectiveness of the Orgone Blanket. It is therefore recommended that it is used in dry conditions and it should always be thoroughly dried after use or exposed to the sun to facilitate the evaporation of moisture trapped deep inside.

The Cloudbuster

Having observed Orgone energy to have a blue colour, Reich reasoned that an envelope of blue Orgone energy surrounded the Earth and filled all of Space. This appears to be synonymous with what modern astronomy calls 'Dark Matter' and which is identified as an anomalous blue glowing halo surrounding galaxies.

Reich reasoned that streaming cloud patterns, the aurora borealis, hurricanes and galaxies were created and put into motion by superimposing streams of Orgone energy, in a cosmic dance.

Thus, Reich proposed that bio-energy could affect planetary ecosystems including weather patterns, and in his efforts to harness Orgone energy from the atmosphere, he invented the Cloudbuster.

The Cloudbuster consisted of an array of metal pipes and tubing inserted into water. Water strongly attracts and absorbs Orgone energy, creating a stronger Orgone energy system than that in the surrounding atmosphere and drawing the atmospheric energy through the pipes. By altering the concentration of atmospheric Orgone energy in this way, clouds could be dissipated, producing rain.

Wilhelm Reich's Cloudbuster

In the early 21st century, inspired by Reich's Cloudbuster, Don Croft described a simple, homemade invention called a Chembuster which he demonstrated was able to "disperse and break up chemtrails, allowing for a return of normal blueness to the sky, an invigoration of the air with a clean, fresh smell and the production of rain in those areas where drought is being artificially created by HAARP and other secret weather controlling technologies."

The Chembuster transmutes DOE (which is the "glue" which holds chemtrails together) into POR, causing the chemtrails to break up and disperse.

What is Orgonite?

Although it was an Austrian Scientist named Karl Hans Welz who invented Orgonite in 1992, Reich's layering of organic and inorganic materials to accumulate Orgone was key in its development.

Orgonite is simply a mix (in an approximately 1:1 ratio) of a high quality carbon-based epoxy resin (which is organic, due to the fact that it is based on petrochemicals) and metal (which is inorganic) along with one or more quartz crystals. This is poured into a mould (typically in the shape of a pyramid, a disc or cone) and the result is a decorative piece sized anywhere between a paperweight and a household ornament. Orgonite pendants are also common.

Since Reich discovered that increasing the number of layers resulted in a stronger accumulation of Orgone, Welz deduced that it is best to use a fine metal powder. Welz's son, Karl Victor Welz, continues to make and sell Orgonite (<https://orgonegenerator.com>) and recommends using a 150 micron or finer powder to achieve as many layers as possible per cubic inch. Karl Victor Welz advocates that, in common with Reich's Orgone Accumulator, Orgonite merely accumulates Orgone from the surrounding atmosphere and thus is capable of accumulating both POR and DOE. It is therefore his opinion that Orgonite should be placed on a sunny windowsill by a plant, for example, and not near any sources of DOE.

However, this point is controversial. In the early 21st century, Croft modified Welz's formulation, using metal shavings/filings in place of the fine metal powder. Both Croft's daughter, Nora, and his wife, Carol, have the gift of being able to see subtle energies and they helped him to develop this new formula which he claimed profoundly improved the effect and power of Orgonite, creating not merely an Orgone accumulator but an Orgone generator - i.e. a device which has the ability to convert DOE into POR, essentially acting as a filter to purify negative energies and re-distribute harmonious energy. Of course, this changes everything. Suddenly, this becomes the ideal device to place near to power grids, electromagnetic fields, nuclear power stations and your Wi-Fi router! Indeed, many people are 'gifting' Orgonite in a bid to heal the environment, by placing Orgonite by mobile phone masts and other sources of DOE. One of the most prolific gifters worldwide is Georg Ritschl from Organise Africa (<https://www.organiseafrica.com/>) who has gifted over 30,000 pieces across Southern Africa. He recounts how rivers that were dry for decades began flowing with water again when the energy of the land was brought into balance with Orgonite. There is a great deal of anecdotal evidence to suggest that these Orgonite devices transmute DOE into POR, thus mitigating the effects of electromagnetic radiation and positively affecting the local environment. However, both Karl Victor Welz and DeMeo maintain that Orgonite is an Orgone Accumulator and not an Orgone Generator. They believe the Orgonite made according to Croft's formula to be largely ineffective and speak strongly against the practice of gifting.

Besides the layers of organic and inorganic materials, there is another explanation for the subtle energies generated by Orgonite though. The epoxy resin used to create Orgonite shrinks during the curing process, creating a permanent mechanical stress on the quartz crystal and activating its piezoelectric property, thus generating an electric charge. (This video explains the piezoelectric effect well: <https://youtu.be/YEJ2qryXcIQ>). It is claimed that it is this that allows DOE to be repolarized, and yet quartz crystals are used in both Welz's and Croft's designs.

It is my opinion that, in the absence of credible research, knowing who to believe and how to test the results objectively and scientifically for ourselves is of utmost importance, lest we are responsible for doing more harm than good. A number of options are available:

- Science attributes the benefits of Orgonite to its production of a stream of negative ions, which a great deal of research has shown to improve health. An Air Ion Meter can be used to measure positive and negative ions.
- An Electromagnetic Field Meter could be used to detect and compare the electromagnetic radiation emitted by technological devices with and without the presence of Orgonite.
- Heliognosis (<https://heliognosis.com>) manufacture the 'Experimental Life Energy Meter', a unique device which is able to detect Orgone and is based on the mysterious Orgone Field Meter of Wilhelm Reich.
- Applied Kinesiology (a.k.a. manual muscle testing) can be used to confirm the energetic effects of Orgonite on the individual.

Just for fun...

An 'energy dome' is a helmet often worn by the American new wave band Devo as part of the members' stage outfits. According to Gerald Casale on the Devo website, "It was designed according to ancient ziggurat mound proportions used in votive worship. Like the mounds it collects energy and recirculates it. In this case the Dome collects the Orgone energy that escapes from the crown of the human head and pushes it back into the Medulla Oblongata for increased mental energy. It's very important that you use the foam insert...or better yet, get a plastic hard-hat liner, adjust it to your head size and affix it with duct tape or Super Glue to the inside of the Dome. This allows the Dome to "float" just above the cranium and thus do its job. Unfortunately, sans foam insert or hard-hat liner, the recirculation of energy WILL NOT occur."
